The chairman of the publicity committee of the 1912 Philippines Carnival writes to inform us that the next great fee ival will be held in Manila from Feb. 3 to Feb. 10, 1912. The Carnival next year will be on a far more magnificent scale than any of former years, and it is hoped that there will be a larger attendance from the China Coast and from America and Australia than in past years. The completion of Manila's new million dollar hotel will permit the city to more comfortably accommodate a larger number of visitors than ever before, and every effort will be made by the directors of the Carnival Association to see that visitors to the city at that time thoroughly enjoy themselves. Reception committees will be appointed to meet and give information to strangers and to see that they have an opportunity to inspect all of the many show places of which Manila can justly be proud. At the same time the Carnival is taking place in that city there will be held there the First Philippines Exposition, in which all of the many The American Consulate-General yesterday provinces of the islands will participate, and the famed products, manufactures, minerals, etc. of the islands can be seen.

Fowler, M.A., was successful in helding the attention of a fair attendance in St. Patrick's Hall last evoning. The speaker, who styled himself "s kind of ecclesiastical tramp," after briefly referring to the Philippines and the Spanish-American war, recounted to his hearers his experiences on some of his journeys, the most interesting being his visit to the Holy City. just after the death of Pope Lee. It had always been his desire, he said, to witness the election and coronation of a Pope, and this desire was fulfilled when Cardinal Sarto was elected and became Plus X. He told of the method of election; of the vast concourse of people who awaited the result at St. Peter's; of the enthusiasm which followed; and of the wonderful coronation ceremony. After describing the ceremony in detail the speaker asked his audience to let him know when they had had enough. "We priests," he said, "talk so much about eternity that we forget all about time." His hearers were evidently also forgetful of time as they listoned with wrapt attention to the interesting story of the Monsignor, and had he continued for another hour it is unlikely that any of those present would "have had enough."

CORRESPONDENCE.

CHINA AND MACAO. (TO THE EDITOR OF THE "HONGKONG

DAILY PRESS." Hongkong, July 13th, 1911. SIR,-With reference to the letter of "A Portuguese" appearing in your issue of to-day I am entirely in agreement with him when he states "there are many things besides Fan-tan (I take it he means "licensed Fan-tan") which are morally indefensible. If your correspondent is in accord with me on this point, I fail to see what further remarks my letter calls for, as if he would take the trouble of again reading my letter of the 8th inst. he would see I have merely pointed out the curious spectacle of an Oriental nation pressing social reform on a European nation and offering money to forward that end. As to your correspondent's remarks as to the position taken up by Portugal towards China in the matter, they appear to amount to this: "We are quite wrong, but unless you assist us we can do nothing." This may represent a business-like view, but is it consistent with the national dignity of a European Power dealing with an Oriental nation? - Yours

> CAPTAIN AND PILOT. WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

Ought the responsibility of the captain of a vessel to cease once the pilot has come aboard is a question over which much controversy has been waged in nautical circles. As matters stand the position is now grossly unfair to the master, who, if he gives orders to the pilot and these are followed with serious results, will be held responsible by the owners, and likewise is held responsible for the sin of omission should any accident occur while the vessel may be in charge of a pilot whom the much-harassed skipper is compelled to take willy nilly.
The latest recommendation of the Board of Trade is to the effect that the master should responsible for the steering and safe conduct of the ship, with the pilot as the master's expert assistant. Such will be acceptable to mastermariners, as relieving them from the anomaly of being held responsible for the ship in charge of another man, but the pilot services of Bombay and Calcutta are still to give their opinion. Take the case of Bombay. It would be impossible for a master after years of absence to conduct his vessel up to this harbour, and the pilots would be sure to resent interference, however well-meant, with their duties. Much more is the case at Calcutta, where the continually-shifting Hughli renders the task of the pilot an exceedingly onerous one. We fancy that the emphatic statement of Captain Deane, our late harbour master, that the pilot must be in charge, and would have to be in charge, and would remain in charge till the end" will be upheld by the Bombay Pilot Service. - Times of India.

THE POR UGUESE DISCOVERY OFJAPAN.

At considerable interest attaches to the letter discovered at Kyoto from the Vicercy of the Indies to Hideyoshi, some account may be given of how the document came to be written. In the first place it may be wentioned that the Vicercy of the Indies was no native Indian Prince, as has been wrongly surmised, but, of course, De Menesez, a Portuguese. The Partuguese discovery of the pussage to India via the Cape of Good Hope was made in 1408, when Da Gama anchored before Calicut, after sailing right round Africa. This fresh trading ground was exploited so quickly that, seven years after wards the first Vicercy of the Indies was sent out in the person of Almeids, shortly to be followed by the great Albuquerque. The conquests of Port gal in the Indies Mr. M. Header Harris (of Messra. Wilkinson | spread rapidly. In 1510. Gos was captured and made the capital of the eastern possessions of Portugal. This was followed by Malacca and then by the Molucess. At the time of the Portuguess discovery of Japan Mr. Harris informed the Court that this was (1542), the Portuguese held an absolute monopoly of the maritime trade from the Red Sea and the Capa of Good Hope to eastward of the Moluccas. Portugal's claims to the lands she conquered in the Orient were based on a Bull issued by Pope Eugene IV. in 1438, which granted her exclusive right to all countries discovered from Cape Nun to the continent of India. Portugal in return promised to spread a knowledge of the Christian religion, and to establish the authority of the Holy See. Thus the Viceroy of the Indies was not only the direct representative goods and the prices of resale, in some cases by of the King of Portugal but also the indirect auction and in some cases privately when a bet- representative of the Pope, charged to spread a knowledge of the Christian religion and to protect Christians. This explains how it was that do Menesez, the Vicercy of the time, came to send the letter to Hideyoshi. The letter was dants. Hidevoshi, after the first formal audience, became very amiable in the contract stated that ten per cent, interest and is alleged to have made some extraordinary promises in regard to the propagation of Christianity. Whether he was then in carnest, or was only playing with the Jemit good deal of correspondence had taken place fathers, remains a mystery, but at any rate with regard to the contracts, but Mr. Harris | Coelho took all Hideyoshi's promises quite serionely and wrote to Valegnani, the Visitor-General who was at Gos, relating how well he had been received and suggesting that the Viceroy tiffs requested the defendants to take delivery should be asked to despatch a special embassy to Japan to thank Hideyoshi for his kindness. De Menesez approved the suggestion and appointed Voleguani himself to conduct the mission. Before Val-grani set out, however, the news came of Hideyoshi's change of front, and fearing that he would not meet with a very warm reception, the envoy tack steps first to enquire through Christain friends in Japan whether Hideyoshi would be willing to receive a mission from the Viceroy of the Indies. Hidevoshi was too astute a roll tician to allow his religious prejudices, if they may be so called, to stand in the way o improving foreign relations, so he readily gave his consent. The mission started badly, Valegnani renched Nagasaki in July, 1590, but there fell ill, which gave an opportunity for his enemies at Hideyoshi's Court to suggest Mr. Harding-I was going to ask for an ad- | that the alleged mission was merely a trick of the priests. AN EFFECT OF THE PANAMA CANAL.

An article from the pen of Admiral A. T. That was the position taken by the people of the Pacific Coast as early as the fifties. When t e Nicaraguan canal project was first mooted by the Accessory Prausit Company the principal object of its premoters was to facilitate the passage of vessels from the Atlantic to the Pacific so that California might receive the supply of labour required to develop its resources, and later, when De Lesseps was seeking moral and financial support for his Panama scheme he urged the benefits that would flow to the Pacific Coast States and Territories by making them more accessible to Enropeans.

Happily we are now getting on solid ground and a healthy view of the subject is being taken. What Admiral Mahan has to say concerning immigration is being received with respectful proposition that it is positively necessary, if the estate of £26,000 was at her disposal. That is the view taken by the Chicago News in commenting on Mahan's article, and it adds: "In any event, the elimination of the long and expensive and tiresome land journey to the Pacific Coast is bound to increase in a marked degree the rate of growth of repulation."

That is the chief thing to be hoped by the Coast. When it obtains its fair proportion of the available labour supply of Europe there will be such a development of resources as will compet the older States "to sit up and take notice."-San Francisco Chronicle.

Then he learned that it was the visiting card of the "doyen." In returning his modest little Bristol board, the humilisted Ambassador added a few words, which read, "The Ambassador of France regrets that he is able to offer only these simple words to your Excellency.

INDUSTRIAL CANADA.

No one in the present day would seriously attempt to refute the fact that Canadian industrial development is making material progress, but not everyone is aware of the wouderfully rapid growth which is taking place in various industries, apart from agriculture, throughout the Dominion. We gather from the Toronto correspondent of the Canalian Agency that the Dominion Textile Company during 1910-11 had a successful year with manufacturing, profits of about 990,000 dols, very nearly 100,000 dols. in excess of the preceding twelve months. RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION BY CONTRACT.

Mr. Cheng Hsiao-shu, the newly appointed Provincial Treasurer of Hunan, it is reported, has recently made some suggestions to the Yuchuan Pa with regard to the construction of railways in China. One of his suggestions. which has been widely discussed by the local Press, is the construction of railways by the contract system. Upon the basis of the estimate of the Chinchow-Aigun Railway, which states that it would be possible to construct the railway at the rate of 19,000 taels per li, he maintains that if the construction of the C nton-Hunkow and the Hankow-Szechuan Railways should be awarded to the lowest bidder, it would be possible to have these railways built at about 20,000 allowing a thousand taels per li for the topographical difficulties that might be encountered in the latter two lines. The usual cost of railways in Chica, he asserts, has been about 30.000 taels a li in the case of the most economically constructed railways. By comparing these two figures he concludes it would be at once apparent as to what would be the most profitable mea ure for the Imperial Government to adopt, The Peking Jih Pao further understands that Mr. Cheng is so thoroughly convinced of the fensibility of his scheme that he is going to recommend it to the Throne on the occasion of his asking Imperial leave to proceed to his new post. According to this journal, in an article published a few days ago, the scheme is not beneficial to China, because by awarding the contract to very little was said about the part the canal circumstances. Here Croney, an elderly build railways to foreign contractors it would might play in the scheme of national defence. | bachelor, was among the customers at the shop, mean the depriving of a great number of labour-It is not very creditable to the intelligence of and expressed indignation at the small wages ers both skilful and otherwise of their the Nation that an appeal based upon the real paid to her. Saying "I really mean it," he un- away by his enthusiasm for the scheme as to canal might still be a debatable problem, instead fastened his cuff, and laying it flat on the forget or to overlook the disadvantages, the natural results of the proposed change. The Cho-yen Pao, however, seems to think > that the scheme is the best that has over been advanced for the construction of railways. The practice in this country has been the awarding of small portions of earth work to minor contractors, and it has never been suggested that even a whole ilway line or a portion of it should be awarded to contractors, excepting perhaps the abortive project for the construction of the Chinchow-Aigun Railway. The scheme has for its recommendation the fact that it would do away with the large number of office holders under the old system and that a large saving in salaries and so forth will be realized. When the railway is being constructed by contractors, it would only be necessary to have one director, one chief engineer, one or two secretaries, a translator perhaps, and a few agents for the purchasing of land and the maintenance of peace. The objectionable features of loan-constructed railways would be more or less eliminated, such GOLD which are responsible for the negotiation of the loan for materials purchased or not purchased through them, the auditing of accounts or the appointment of chief en ineers. The contractors who are entrusted with the construction of such a railway would be those whose bids for the work are the lowest so that the first cost of the railway would be the lowest possible under any circumstances.

Judging from the views both for and against the scheme, it may be noted that so far as the loan agreements are concerned, it makes not much difference whether the railways are constructed by contract or not. The agreement would still prevail in the appointment of chief engineers and auditors and in the payment of FNGLISH. commissions for materials purchased abroad. Novertheless, there are certainly advantages to be derived from the construction of the rullways being awarded to the lowest bidders who would be bound by contracts. In framing the contracts, therefore, care should be taken to safe-guard tile interest of this country especially in the matter of labour and materials. If i could be managed that Chinese materials should be used, much of the commissions that would go to the purchasing agencies would thus be saved, and industries in this country would be SUPERIOR considerably encouraged. It is to be hoped, therefore, that the Imperial Government would see their way to benefiting themselves by the fair competition among would-be contractors and the economy that is surely to be realized by adopting Mr. Cheng's proposal to construct our State railways by contract .- ' cking Daily News.

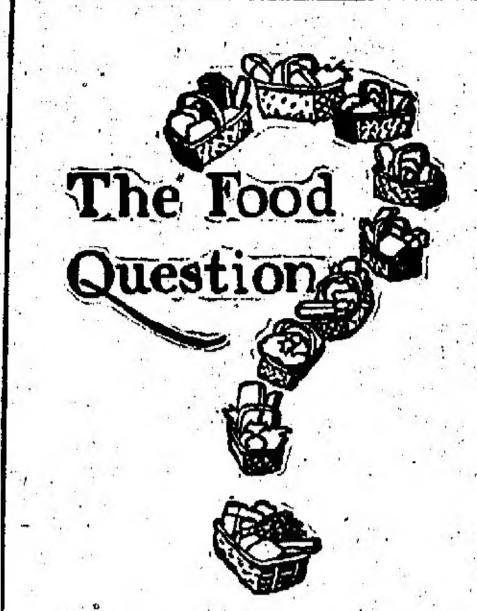

THE FUTURE OF CANADA.

A writer in The National Review argues that, while annexational designs on Canada may express rather a racial instinct than a conscious policy, reciprocity not only makes annexation fessible but renders it almost inevitable because of the community of interest which it must create between two peoples living on the opposite sides of an invisible border A Chas. J. Gaupp policy of coercion can be dismissed as altogether impossible. Canada could not be conquered by force of arms. But coercion can assume subtle forms, and a fiscal agreement, such as that embodied in the Taft-Fielding compact, is an armoury of delicately refined weapons capable of reaching infinitely further than the clumsy apparatus of the "tented field."

Under present conditions Canadian trade follows the east and west track of the great trank railroads that link the ports on the Atlantic and the Pacific. Under Reciprocity with the United States a rival movement will begin which in course of time can hardly fail to determine that the predominating course of trade shall be north and south. Around the Great Lakes, where already there is practically homogeneity of race on both sides of the border, there will ensue identity of industrial and commercial interest. Farther West the agricultural community will become more and more dependent on the growing millions in the United States. Every year will multiply and strengthen the strands of the web spun by this fiscal loom. Canada will increasingly become the debter to America for trade which could not exist if Reciprocity were abandoned. Is it an inconceivable result that when vast new interests have been called into being the statesmen of the Republic, obeying that instinct which one cannot deny is one of the strongest characteristics of the Anglo-Saxon race, will determine to utilise the strength of what this writer | law courts of either of the contracting o untries. calls the "pocket interest" to b ing political union a step or two nearer to realisation?

On the other hand, the Imperial sentiment in Canada must not be overlooked. It is powerful now, and though it is possible that companies and partnership of the same nature. it may be weakened if nothing be done to The Asiatic torpedo boat flotills, under the correct the influence of other tendencies we must not lose sight of the fact that the at this port, and, by holding the master U.S. Navy, consisting of the torpedo boat feeling of loyalty to the Empire, to which the destroyers Bainbridge, Dale, Barry, Chauncey Imperial Conference gives periodical expression, and Decatur, will leave Cavite to-morrow (July is associated in a natural and congenial manner with a pride of nationality which is one of the port of call will be Hongkong, where the little most significant things in recent Canadian history. Sozodont

Some people complain of the expense of a good dentifrice. SOZODONT is both good and economical. Only a little is wanted. It lasts. It keeps the teeth clean and frees them from the corrosion of tartar. And it is the nicest dentifrice one can use fragrant, pleasant, and antiseptic.

Soundont is in three forms powder, liquid, and paste: each equally effective.

Try the powder first it meets the requirements of most people.

NERVOUS DEBILITY.

ITS CAUSE AND CURE. In consequence of the stress of modern life.

Nervous Debility is one of the most prevalent disorders of mankind. The everlasting wear and tear of the nervous system incidental to the demands of daily life are not repaired as readily as when men lived more peacefully and had more time for the recuperative powers to exercise their influence on the body. The result is, we are all prone to make overdrafts on the bank of health.

To conquer this evil we need something which will restore the excess of phosphorus used up in the vital processes and supply a food which is | whose judgment the welfare of the nation is at easily digested and readily assimilated, for the tired body has not the nervous force necessary to digest the heavy foods most of us have to eat The preparation which supplies these essential qualities in an ideal-form is Sanatogen. It is universally recognised by the medical profession as the world's greatest restorative and reconstituent. The phosphorus it contains rouses the feeble flames of vitality to a blaze, while the large quantity of nutritive casein of which it is, likewise, composed, is quickly and easily assimilated by the feeble digestive apparatus. The result is soon felt in renewed strength and vigour, both of body and mind.

Sir Charles A. Cameron, C.B., M.D. F.R.C.P., etc., Medical Officer of Health and Public Analyst, Dublin, says :- "After analysing Sanatogen I have arrived at the conclusion that Sanatogen is a substance of the highest nutritive value, containing, as it does, a large amount, relatively speaking, of organic phosphorus, that is, phosphorus which is offered to the tissues in exactly the form in which it can be easily absorbed. It is an excellent nerve Sanatogen may be obtained at all chemists.

THE AWAKENING OF SAMUEL. BY WILLIAM HILL (HONGKONG).

Samuel Jones was a poculiar individual. A character by himself, one of these people who are only met once in a lifetime. It would be a difficult tank to present Samuel faithfully in a mere pen picture. About five feet five inches in height, age thirty, fairly well built, equally well dressed, and not bad looking is a very flattering description of Samuel in the flesh. although he had never before realized this fact. His method of iocomotion possessed a touch of so clearly as now. originality inimitable. It was something between a glide and a trot, yet it was wonderful the amount of ground he could get over in a short time. I have designated him a peculiar individual, and I think I have used the correct asked. term. His every temperament, his every characteristic was peculiar. A person with more singular ideas it would be impossible to meet. His ideas were also original.

He had a strong tendency towards Socialism, "I v but his ideas of social equality often led him Most." into a tight corner. He maintained that everyone should be considered equal in every respect to his neighbour. Capitalists were not needed. He would put all money in the hands of the government and let them finance the nation.

The question of votes for women was a strong argument with Samuel. A woman's place was at home looking after tier children and bringing them up in the way they should go. He could not understand what those who occupied seats in the House of England's Imperial Government were coming to to tolerate for one moment the absurd agitation concerning "Woman's Rights."

" I am led to think," declared Sa anel, "that those set in authority are acting more like a pack of old women than a body of statesmen on stake. By the numberable laws of God and nature woman always has been, now is, and always will be subject to man, and the recent disgraceful demonstrations of those fanatical creatures who style themselves suffragettes is an insult to the Creator." Samuel Jones was a woman bater. The least he had to do with the weaker sex the better he was pleased. That mysterious something called Love, with all its attendant emotional and sentimental phases, was, to him, a lot of rot and humbug. Several fascinating young ladies had tried their best to ensuare, him, for he was a lish worth hooking, but the bait had never been tempting enough. Their charms had no effect on Samuel. He kept them at a distance, till at last they left him severely alone. The village of Bolcombe boasted but one shop, and this indispensible establishment, with the exception of the butcher's supplied all the temporal needs of the inhabitants. Over each of the two large windows, one on either side of the door, in big bold letters skillfully worked in black and gold on a background of deep red, were the words Grocer and Draper respectively. In the middle, just above the entrance, the name of the shopkeeper-Samuel Jones.

This worthy gentleman also kept a small dairy farm, and one of the several responsible positions he held in the village was that of Postmaster. The knowledge that Mr. Jones' interest in the bank reached four figures, and good round figures at that, was common property, consequently it can hardly be marvelled at that all young ladies of marriageable age and inclinations jumped at every possible chauce that presented itself to win the attention of this obstinate bachelor. But up to the present not one of them had met with any measure of success, neither had they any very bright hopes of ever doing so. He did not exactly tell them that he did not wish to be bothered with them; he simply hinted it in a very polite way, and they never failed to understand. Samuel was no sportsman.

Bolcombe possessed a very fair cricket eleven. also a football team, but all Bamuel knew about them was the fact that once a year he was pestered for a subscription.

Now it was very fortunate that Bolcombe had somehow managed to be situate on the banks of a fairly large river, for, although Samuel was not sportsman, he was very partial to one form of recreation, and that was rowing. He owned two fine boats, and hardly a day passed but what he had a good pull. Sometimes he would row slowly up stream for two or three miles, and then come back at an amazing speed, and on such occasions as these there would usually be a group of villagers waiting to cheer him as he

And it was during one of these long excursions up the river that an incident happened of which I am going to tell.

For the past ten years Samuel had enjoyed undisputed possession of the right of way on those waters. He could not remember having ever seen any other craft but his own affoat

He had come to look upon it as his own personal property, and when talking of his skill as an carsman he would always refer to it as "my

What then must have been his surprise one day to find himself not many yards behind and quickly overhanling another boat similar to his own? A second look satisfied him that he was not dreaming, rather he was very much awake, for not only was there another boat on the river, but thu same hoat was in the hands of a woman. When he had recovered himself somewhat he decided to investigate, and a few strong strokes brought him alongside the intruder. Now Mr. Samuel Jones was often heard to say that he knew by name, or, if not by name, by sight every living soul in and within a ten mile radius of Bolcombe. When strangers visited those parts he always knew where they came from, what they were, and how long they were likely to stop, for information such as this was in the interests of his business.

But now he had to acknowledge himself beaten, for here all alone in a boat on "his river" was a young person of the "hated" sex of whom he know absolutely nothing, seeming to spring up before him in a moment from nowhere. The only habitation of any importance anywhere near was a dreary old house about half a mile distant up the river called "The Moat," and this was occupied by a very mysterious personage known locally as Prof. Spingle. This eccentric individual lived the life of a recluse, for, with the exception of the housekeeper and a man who might be termed the gardener, no one had ever been seen at the place.

As the two boats drew level he slowed down. For a space occupying less time than it takes to record it they took stock of each other, each seeming to grasp every detail at a glance. And this was Samuel's summing up:

Twenty to twenty-three, fairly good looking, five feet six inches in height dark hair, blue eyes, shapely arms, slender waist, small feet, brown open work stockings, short white skirt, waist belt with silver clasp, and loose shortsleeved low-necked bodice of pale pinkish colour, prettily trimmed with ribbons and lace. Her hat, an ordinary straw one, with two enormous pins stuck through it, lay in the bottom of the

It was evident that this was not the first time she had been in a boat, for it takes much practice to be able to feather an oar properly.

They looked at each other for perhaps half a minute. Then she spoke. "Good afternoon," she said.

"Good afternoon," he answered. Quite a commonplace remark. He had almost expected that she would apologise for trespassing, pleading that she was ignorant, or something as silly. But no, she did not seem a bit disturbed by his presence. He began to feel awkward. What could he say, what could he do? He could not order her off the river, for it was as much hers as his,

"I have not seen you before," he ventured. " No, I do not think you have," she said.

"Are you staying in the neighbourhood?" he "Yes, I am stopping at the Moat for a week

She let the cars trail in the water, allowing the boat to drift. He did the same. "I was not aware they kept boats at the

This time she laughed quite merrily. "Fancy my uncle keeping boats! Why, he doesn't keep anything in that musty old place except two dogs, a cat, and some chickens. brought this one with me. I don't know what I should have done with myself if I hadn't. There seems no way of amusing oneself in this horrid show."

Here was a queer creature indeed, thought Samuel. A young lady carting her own boat about with her. What next would people do? "Are you fond of rowing?" was his next

"Oh, yes, I love it. At home I spend all my spare time on the water. We live at Kingstonon-Thames, you know. A perfectly delightful place. Where do you live? "At Bolcombo. You do not know the place, I suppose? ". "Not even by name." She brushed back with her fingers some hair that had broken bounds. "You see, I have only been at the Most about eighteen hours, and this is my first visit to this part of the country. But I mean to have a look round as soon as can. Will you show me Bolcombo?"

Samuel was not prepared for this. He began to wish he had kept out of the way. But there was no escape now. He hesitated, trying to frame an evasive excuse. She was looking at him expectantly.

"One day, whon you are in the village. will tell you all there is interesting about the place, but there is not much to tell." "Thank you so much. I will come to morrow afternoon, But stop! I do not even know your name yet, or where you live, I mean your address. My name is Mildred Langford. Millie for short." He felt for a card, found one, and handed to her. She read it carefully.

"So you keep a shop," she remarked. He felt like retorting that the shop kept him, but

"Yes: I am the owner of the largest business in the district!" And as he said it he tried to look as proud as he felt.

"That's very nice," she said. " And now, she continued, as she arranged her skirt neatly, just leaving her dainty toes showing, "seeing. that we have been so unceremoniously introduced. I conclude that we may consider ourselves friends. That being the case there. can be no harm in one friend showing another friend round. Therefore, Mr. Samuel Jones, you are to expect me at your residence at Bolcombe at three-thirty sharp to-morrow afternoon, and I shall want a cup of tea after rowing all that way. You are quite agreeable, aren't you?"

Poor Samuel. Was ever a man in such a fix? He would have liked to have said no with as much emphasis as possible, but he couldn't muster the courage. He must say something. It was evident to Samuel that she was the wrong person to take excuses, and he could not think of a suitable one just then. She noticed his confusion, and it was plain to be seen the twinkle in her eyes that she was enjoying i the joke immensely. So he said—"Yes, yes, certainly. Shall be delighted, I'm sure.

you do not know your way." Her wonderful eyes seemed to be looking right into his very soul. 🧽 "That is a difficulty which is easily overcome. I am sure you will be returning to Bolcombe presently, and what is easier than that I should pull back with you? And now I think we had really better be moving. See, the sun is already well down behind the trees, and I begin to feel chilly". So they rowed back together. And Samuel kent a little ahead so that he might watch her action. She was splendid. He had never seen such sculling before. - He always considered himself good, but she excelled. Seemingly without any exertion, graceful in every movement, she made the boat skim over the water. They soon reached Bolcombe. "Here we are," he shouted, and deftly brought up alongside his little landing stage. "That is my place you can just see between those two poplar trees. This path leads right to the door.' She noted the way he indicated, then immedistely turned about. "Good-bye," she called back. "Don't forget three-thirty," and with a few powerful strokes was soon well away up stream. Mr. Samuel Jones made his boat fast and walked indoors.

That evening it was the talk of the village that

Samuel Jones had been seen on the river with a strange young lady. She was there punctually at three-thirty. Samuel was not at the water's edge to welcome her or give her a hand with the boat. He knew he should have been, but he was shy. For hours he had struggled to screw up the courage necessary, but at the last minute failed miserably. From one of the windows he could observe his landing stage, and when he had looked out at three o'clock he noticed about half a dozen village louts hanging round. They were there at

And she was due at three-thirty. No; he could not bring himself to face the music, so he went into the shop and looked through some books. But perhaps, after all, she wouldn't come. He tried to make himself believe that it was a huge joke. What an idiot he was to allow himself to be worried by a mere woman. And yet, try as he would, he could not keep himself from thinking about her. He could not understand it.

three-fifteen, and still there at three-twenty-five.

Woman had always been such an inferior being to him, an insignificant item in life. And then there was the village gossip. Already everyone knew that he had been seen rowing in company with a strange girl. And this same girl was coming to see him. She would possibly want him to take her round the village, and he could not very well refuse now. What would people say when they saw them together? What excuse could he make for his conduct after all his avowed hatred for the weaker sex?

Would any explanation be accepted?

Just then he thought he heard someone cough gently. He glanced towards the door, and lo! there she stood. It had been many years since such a vision of beauty had crossed that threshold. Even Samuel's unappreciative eye. had noted that she was fair to look on, that, as she sat at her ease in the boat, there was a fascination about her which he could not explain.

all night, he was forced to admit that he had never before behold such leveliness. It was not a case of fine feathers make fine birds. She was not gorgeously arrayed in the extraragant fixery of such as the present day women are so fond. Samuel stood spell-bound, enraptured, enthralled, enravished. Never before had he experienced a sensation such as that which now flooded his whole being. He stood and gazed on her, unable to move or speak while she smiled sweetly as she advanced towards him, and he knew that from benceforth he was captive to

Then suddenly he awoke to the fact that he was acting very foolishly.

And now, as she stood in the doorway, looking at him with those eyes which had haunted him

He went to meet her, taking the band she extended. There seemed to be some hidden magic in the touch of that hand, for it sent another thrill right through him.

"Well, Mr. Jones, here I am, you see. I had half expected that you would be out there by the river to meet me, but no doubt you are too busy to worry your head about a silly thing like me. I shouldn't wonder if you hadn't forgotten that I was coming. What a beautifully shop So clean and tidy, and so tastefully arranged. Do you like shopkeoping?"
Samuel was beginning to collect his scattered

"Oh, yes, I like it very much," he stammered:

"You see, I don't do much work myself, but look after the books; my assistants do it all." "I understand. They do the work and you take the profit." She lifted the lid of a glass case that stood on the counter and took a choos- BOLE AGENTS IN HONGKONG: late: "And do you live all alone here, Mr.

"Am I to infer anything from that?" she He realized what a blunder he had made and hastened to rectify it.

"Please do not misinterpret me. I am sure I did not mean to insinuate for one moment that you were disturbing my peace. I so seldom have any visitors, so seldom see anyone except my usual customers, that I get quite nervous when I see a fresh face, and hardly know what I am saying. Will you be so good as to step inside and have a cup of tea with me ?" "Now you really are talking sensible. Load on most gallant sir."

She followed him into a casy little sitting room, where tea was laid for two. Samuel quickly lost his reserve and shyness in the presence of this charming creature, and by the time they had finished their tea they were exchanging confidences as if they had known one another for years. He told her all his family history and she listened attentively. Then she related tales of adventure which had befallen her when boating or shooting. So the time passed quickly, and he was more than sorry when she suggested that they should have a look round outside. There was something very much the matter with Samuel. What it was he could not say, but never before had he felt as he did then. His brain seemed on fire, his pulse was going at a terrific pace, every nerve in his body was tingling as though he had received an electric

THE AWAKENING OF SAMUEL.

Could it be that this giddy, handsome girl who was laughing and joking with him, had anything to do with it? He took her by a path across the fields to the old church, and told her all he knew of its his. tory, not forgetting to point out the last reating place of his ancestors. Then they had a look at the Vicarage.

It seemed strange that fate should have decreed that the Vicar should emerge through the drive gates just at that moment, but it was so. He looked hard at Samuel, as if he doubted the evidence of his eyes, then smiled, raised his hat, and passed on.

Poor Samuel. He went het and cold all over two or three times in quick succession, Whatever would the Vicar think of him, and, which was of much more importance, what would

He was aroused from his gloomy thoughts by a voice which sounded to him like sweet music asking:-" Is that the parson? "

Had it been anybody elso who had asked this nestion he would have answered that was the sweep. But as it was be simply said :- "Yes, that is the parson. 900 h.p., Commander Ragot de la Touche, The Rev. Frank Openface, and a very nice fellow he is, well liked by everybody in the

It is an underiable fact that all things come to an end, and so it came about that just as Olry, river gunboat, 170 tons, 6 guns, 500 h.p. | the light was beginning to fade he found himself handing her into her boat.

"Do not disappoint me," she was saying. "You have promised, you know, and I shall expect you at three o'clock to-morrow afternoon, and if you do not turn up I will never pulled away.

As she rounded the first bend she waved her hand to him. He waved his hat. Then she disappeared out of sight.

Samuel walked slowly back to his shop. It has been said that Love comes to a man but once in a lifetime, though some profess otherwise. There are many who do not believe in Love at first sight. Nevertheless it is possible. Who will deny the existence of Personal Magnetism? Is it not true that daily we come in contact with people with whom we are favourable impressed at a glance, others whom we immediately dislike and repel? And this peculiarity of our nature is more pronounced among persons of opposite sex.

Now this law of repulsion or attraction had had but little if any effect on Samuel. Perhaps. it was because he had resisted it to the atmost, or that his nature and general temperament was vastly different to that of the average youth, for seemingly the young men of this present generation fall in love with every pretty face they see, and as quickly fall out sgalu. Possibly it was during an unguarded moment that Samuel was overcome and lay slain at the feet of this goddess in a boat. For the next seven days without a break he had met her up the river. Sometimes they rowed slowly side by side and talked and laughed. Then one day Samuel took out his largest boat which held two, and they both occupied the same boat and took turns at pulling. And then, when they felt tired, they would pull in under the sheltering bank, and then perhaps they both occupied the same seat. One day they climbed from the boat on to the bank and sat and lay for two solid hours on the beautiful mossy turi among the leaves and flowers. Samuel was in the seventh heaven of happiness. It was somewhere about this time that the Quick Supply Provision Company at Bretterham, the nearest market town, received an order by express post from Mr. Samuel Jones of Bolcombe for two dozen boxes of fancy chocolates and three pairs of a certain make of gloves. Every day for three weeks with but one exception did Samuel go up the river.

He neglected his business and consequently some of his customers were complaining. Mrs. Kindart, the housekeeper, pleaded with him once or twice to try and est something, but all in vain. His appetite for things material had vanished. He was living on love, and judging from appearances was not getting very fat on it. Night after night he lay swake praying for the day to break, for the moment to come when he should again behold her. It was heaven to be in her presence, and he was satisfied-for a week or two. And then another idea entered his head, and this one was not very original. One night he suddenly asked why he should not Then he thought of the local gossip, but the next minute dismissed it from his mind. What was local gossip compared with her? Why, he would face a universe for her sake, let alone Bolcombe. Love overcomes all difficulties, breaks down all barriers, and makes heroes of cowards. And so that night he decided that on the morrow he would ask her to be Mrs. Jones. Soon after the King of Day had shot forth his glorious beams across the chilly earth Samuel drove quickly away from Bolcombe, bound for Bretterham. When he returned, some three hours later, he felt a very happy man. Stowed away in his waistcoat pocket was a little packet which contained a pretty little ring. He was due to meet her at three thirty, it was now twelve noon. Three and a half long hours to wait. So to pass the time he went out and washed the boat. At three o'clock he pushed off, taking with him his precious little packet and some more chocolates. With long powerful strokes he sped over the water. Twenty minutes brought TRADE MARK REGULATIONS him to the appointed meeting place, to the place where to-day he would decide his fate. He looked round. No boat to be seen, Well, he was ten minutes before time; she would come very soon. But the ten minutes passed and she did not come. What could have happened? She had always been punctual before. Perhaps she had met with an accident He would row on round the next bend. He had taken one stoke towards the fulfillment of this intention when his attention was arrested by a boy on the bank waving his arms and shorting. Laying on his oars he shouted back What's the matter, youngster?"

" Be you Mr. Jones, sir?" you want with me?" "Well, sir, I've got a letter"-and he held up the article named -" wot a young lady give ter me ter give ter you."

A thousand thoughts suggested themselves to Samuel's mind as he manouvred the boat into a position from which he could reach the note. Was she ill? Had she forsaken him! Was her uncle keeping her away? and so on. With feverish haste he tore open the envelope and this is what he read:

Dear Mr. Jones So very sorry to have to disappoint you today, but my husband une rpectedly came down from town this morning and insisted on my returning with him at once. Accept my sincere thanks for all your kindness Yours

MILDRED LANGFORD.

THE SCOTTISH CENSUS.

A country, says the Glasgow Herald, with 4,759,445 inhabitants, which shows an increase of 6.4 per cent. despite the emigration of a quarter of a million of its sons and daughters, cannot be said to be "depopulated," except by a wilful misuse of language. Nor does the Census show that there has been any dramatic change in the distribution of the population during the period. Of the sixteen countiesincluding Ross and Cromarty, without their casual naval visitors who swelled their returnswhich show a decrease of population, no fewer than eleven have been declining for at least fifty years. Argyll reached its maximum population as long ago as 1831, and has since been losing. Inverness has gone down in numbers since 1841. The other nine began to decrease in population between 1841 and 1861, when the introduction which is the characteristic of modern civilisation, is well illustrated in this Census. Nominally, the population living in the burghs has not on the 10th ultime for Hongkong and Far the burghs. But as almost all the industrial counties show increases while the rural counties do not, it is clear that the urban population, though not all under burghal jurisdiction, has grown far more rapidly than the raral population. Some of the populous suburbs of Glasgow, for example, are under County Council rule, and are therefore accounted extra-The Bank Line str. Orteric sailed from burghal, but they are really urban communities. The increase in the population of Glasgow's The Bank Line str. Luceric left Kebe for "outer ring" is no less than 66,671, or 18.8 per cent. The suburbs of Edinburgh also show a The Olof Wijk & Co. str. Yeddo left Port large increase. These and similar facts confirm Said on the 6th instant, and is expected here on the moral of the last Census that the purely urban movement—the centripetal tendency of are no longer content to crowd into the limited area of a particular burgh jurisdiction. On the contrary, when the population of an area exneeds a certain density, it now overflows into suburbs. This centrifugal tendency is obvious in the case of Glasgow, which shows an increase of only 1.1 per cent., whereas Govan has increased by 9.2 per cent., Partick by 23.1

Edinburgh, again, has an even smaller increase than Glasgow, with 0.9 per cent. more than in 1901. But her neighbouring parishes have grown 12.1 per cent, adding four times as many

This suburban movement, in so far as it makes for better housing and healthier conditions, is all to the good, but it necessarily raises new

It is interesting to note that, spart from the two great cities which are almost stationary, the rule is for the large burghs to increase while the small burghs decline come and go, and are usually soon forgotten; tractions than life in or near a large burgh with but the oil kings, money kings, and other potentates of commerce go on for ever.

There is no lack of important news from all which compels notice is the great increase which compels notice is the great increase rapid development of new coal-pits and is creditable to Scottish enterprise and industry.
